

To Whom it May Concern:

The attempts by the NAB to limit the available technology in today's marketplace represents yet another short-sighted attempt by a reactionary and out-of-touch group to limit the choices available to consumers. If the NAB fears its inability to compete with XM radio services, it has two simple choices: 1) It can update/upgrade its own services to compete with the superior product offered by satellite radio, or 2) They can watch their declining market-share decline even further. It should not be the job of the government to protect the diminishing influence of a group of businesses unwilling to bring themselves kicking and screaming into the 21st century.
